7. NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION:

The James Monroe Thompson House, or "Shady Rest," is located at 5728 Saxapahaw Road, Thompson Township, in southeast Alamance County. Originally the centerpiece of a 123-acre farm, the double-pen log house now stands on a 2.4 acre tract. The main elevation of the house faces south; it stands at a right angle to the present road, with the west gable end facing Saxapahaw Road. The house is set in a grassy yard planted with spring bulbs and rose bushes and shaded by old maple and locust trees. It is set back from the rural road next to a neighborhood of contemporary dwellings built on part of the original farm acreage.

In 1872 James Monroe Thompson built a two-story log addition beside an existing c. 1850 one-story, single-pen log house; the original log house was then used as a kitchen and formed the left (west) half of the expanded house. The construction date and early history of this pen are unknown, but the date can be approximated because the roof rafters meet at a ridge board, a construction feature ordinarily found on Alamance County's post-1850 log buildings. When the adjoining two-story wing was constructed, Thompson covered both units with unpainted weatherboards which survive intact.

Each log unit stands on a stone foundation, is topped a metal-clad gable roof, and has an exterior end chimney: the chimney on the one-story, older pen is stone with a brick stack and the other chimney is brick. The one-story log pen is used as the kitchen today, with the parlor and bedrooms located in the two-story section.

The interior of the one-story single-pen kitchen has exposed chamfered ceiling beams, whitewashed logs, a large stone hearth, six-over-three windows (some with old, perhaps original, glass), and a loft area with exposed rafters of stripped round logs.

The two-story log addition contains one large room on the first floor which is sheathed with wide vertical planks; six-over-six sash windows; a two-panel door at the main entrance; a rear plank-and-batten door; and beaded ceiling joists. The single flight of stairs to the second floor is located in a narrow center hall beside a partition wall at the west end of the parlor. A narrow door was cut in the east wall of the kitchen to make a passageway between the kitchen and parlor. One large bedroom (originally divided into two bedrooms) on the second floor has whitewashed log walls, a plank ceiling... and wide plank floor boards.

A barn, log smokehouse, corn crib and fenced kitchen garden which originally stood in the field east of the house do not survive. A contributing (C) late nineteenth century board-and-batten covered well house stands a few steps in front of the original wing of the house.
8. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:

Summary:

The James Monroe Thompson House, also known as "Shady Rest," is significant under Criterion C as an intact example of a double-pen log dwelling reflecting two stages of construction, a building type discussed in the multiple property listing, "Log Buildings in Alamance County, North Carolina, c. 1780-c. 1930." The present appearance of "Shady Rest" dates from 1872 when James Monroe Thompson added a two-story single-pen log wing to an existing c. 1850 one-story single-pen log house and then covered both units with unpainted weatherboards. The house, once the centerpiece of Thompson's farm, is now owned by his grand-daughter, Dorothy Jobe Crawford, who grew up here and now maintains the house for use as her summer residence.

Historical Background:

According to family tradition, James Monroe Thompson, a Civil War veteran, built the two-story log wing of this house about the time of his marriage to Rebecca Patton on December 19, 1872. He added this wing to an already existing one-story log house (history unknown) which Thompson then used as a kitchen. It is not known how Thompson acquired his initial tract of land (apparently no deeds survive). He may have received it from his family since many of his kinsmen lived in the immediate vicinity (see below). According to the 1880 Population Schedule of Alamance County, Thompson lived here with his wife Rebecca Patton Thompson and their four children who then ranged in age from six years to one month. 1

The 1880 Agricultural Census indicates that Thompson's farm was typical of those found in Alamance County at that time. The farm consisted of sixty tilled acres, forty-six "unimproved, old fields," and ten acres of forest. The land and buildings were valued at $800, farm implements at $20, and livestock at $175. He paid his hired farm laborer $125 that year. He owned three horses, two cows which produced 100 pounds of butter, nine swine, and nine chickens which produced twenty-five dozen eggs. Fifteen acres were planted in corn, producing 300 bushels; six acres of oats yielded fifteen bushels; fifteen acres of wheat produced forty-six bushels; fifteen acres were planted in sweet potatoes; and twenty cords of wood were harvested from the wooded acres. 2
James Monroe Thompson enlarged farm slightly in 1885 by buying almost five acres which adjoined his farm from kinsman (Uncle?) Samuel Thompson. [The 1893 W.L. Spoon map of Alamance County indicates that there were at least fifteen Thompson family members living within a narrow six mile band of each other along Meadow Creek and the Haw River. Ten of them were located in aptly named Thompson Township, east of the Haw; five other Thompsons lived just across the Haw River to the west.] James Monroe Thompson's parents, George F. and Sarah Thompson, gave their son a twenty-seven acre tract on the west side of the river in Albright Township in 1915, reserving "the right of the fruits of the land."

The present owner, Dorothy Jobe Crawford, is the grand-daughter of James Monroe Thompson. She grew up at Shady Rest with her brother, Adrian, her widowed mother, Maggie Thompson Jobe, her grandmother, Rebecca (Becky) Patton Thompson, her cousin, Ilene Thompson Riddle, and two spinster aunts, Min and Cleora Thompson. She remembers her grandmother roasting sweet potatoes in the hot ashes of the large kitchen fireplace and popping corn over the dying flames. Her grandmother slept in a bed placed in the rear corner of the kitchen. Upstairs in the two-story wing, a room was curtained off for her brother Adrian. Later the women of the household built a better partition "with boards from the sawmill and layer and layer of paper." Her Aunt Min did most of the family's cooking and Aunt Cleora tended the cows and churned butter from their milk. Mrs. Crawford recalls that the small center hallway next to the kitchen functioned as the "dairy" in the winter; the milk and butter, as well as canned fruits and vegetables, were kept there. In the summer the milk and butter were kept in the smokehouse (now destroyed).

The Thompson family members were devoted members of the nearby Salem United Methodist Church. Min and Cleora were the "unsalaried custodians." They kept the church clean, washed and starched the crocheted altar clothes, washed the baptismal pitcher, and polished the woodstove. "'Are you ready for the meeting?' was a question often heard in Mrs. Crawford's childhood. It was not an inquiry about one's spiritual health. It meant 'Are your (church) floors scrubbed, your windows clean and your curtains washed and starched, and your cakes and pies baked?'

Mrs. Crawford recalled that when her log house was cleaned "from top to bottom" her job was to dust the "trinkets" or small items. The log walls of the kitchen were whitewashed annually which meant all the furniture was removed and the noon meal served outside, a novel treat for the household's children.

Dorothy Jobe married T(ed) R. Crawford in 1931. Ted Crawford was a farmer who grew cotton for a cash crop. In 1943 Crawford's cotton acreage was slightly enlarged when his parents sold him twelve and one half nearby (but apparently not adjoining) acres.

Gradually during the 1960s and 1970s T.R. and Dorothy Crawford sold the former Thompson farm acreage which was then developed as residential lots. They reserved the 2.4 acre log house tract for themselves and maintained Mrs. Crawford's childhood home.

Today, the James Monroe Thompson House is little changed from Dorothy Jobe Crawford's childhood. The board partition in the second story bedroom has been removed, and a refrigerator has replaced the "dairy." The house has fresh whitewash and clean, starched curtains at the windows. Now Mrs. Crawford grandchildren enjoy visits to their family's old homeplace which is so fondly maintained.
