Located in rural northeast Iredell County, the Gaither House is a well-preserved, two-story, 3x2-bay frame house dating from the mid-nineteenth century. Primarily reflective of the vernacular Greek Revival style, the house also retains some elements which are hold-overs from the Federal period. The house presents a very symmetrical, ordered appearance, and alterations are almost non-existent.

The Gaither House is headed by a gable roof with overhanging boxed and molded eaves and wide cornice returns. The single-shoulder end chimneys have been cemented over except for the replacement stacks. All windows are 6/9 sash with fluted surrounds and plain corner blocks. The center bay entrance porch has a hipped roof and solid, fluted Doric columns with no caps or bases, possibly replacements. While the main body of the house is weatherboarded, the area under the porch is covered with flush sheathing and has a molded baseboard. The decorative entrance boasts a double-leaf front door with three flat panels, 5-pane sidelights, and a symmetrically molded surround with corner blocks formed by receding concentric squares. On the center rear of the house is a one-story wing with identical eave and corner board details as on the rest of the house. Attached to the rear of the wing is an added, partially enclosed, porch with hipped roof similar to that of the front porch.

The interior of the two-story section of the house has a center hall plan with single room on either side. Walls and ceilings are flush-sheathed. Doors have two vertical panels, and the hall door surrounds and corner blocks are identical to those of the front entrance. Other door surrounds are simpler. The stairway leading to the second story has plain square newel, molded handrail and curvilinear stair brackets. Mantels exhibit more of the feel of a heavy, vernacular late Federal form than of the Greek Revival style. One has simple fluted pilasters and frieze with fluted lower band and three recessed panels. Another has a heavy cushion molding around the firebox and a tripartite frieze with corner blocks and center tablet composed of concentric rectangular moldings.

South and west of the house are around ten barns, sheds, and other outbuildings constructed by the present owners after they purchased the house in 1939.
The Gaither House serves as a well-preserved and largely unaltered example of a mid-nineteenth century Greek Revival rural house in north Iredell County. Its well-defined details are consistently applied on both exterior and interior, establishing a high quality of design for even a relatively unpretentious house such as this.

C. The Gaither House embodies the distinctive characteristics of the popular Greek Revival style as interpreted in a rural north Iredell vernacular house during the mid-nineteenth century.
The land on which the Gaither House stands had been in the family long before the home was constructed. John Gaither, Sr., had owned between six and seven hundred acres along Hunting Creek for some years before his death in 1844. His will directed that the vast estate be divided equally between his two sons, A. B. F. and W. T. Gaither. The court interpreted the directive to mean an equal division in value, not acreage, since A. B. F. received 240 acres while W. T. was allotted 480 acres. The difference in value was apparently the dwelling house and outbuildings which went to A. B. F. Gaither. Between 1857 and 1860 W. T. Gaither purchased an additional 867 acres on Hunting Creek adjoining that which he inherited in 1845. His extensive holdings made Gaither one of the largest landowners in antebellum Iredell County. Sometime between 1844 and 1860, the home now standing was constructed for W. T. Gaither and his wife Mary Elizabeth.

The Civil War seriously damaged the fortunes of the Gaither family, but W. T. managed to hold on to about half of his property, including the dwelling house. He turned much of the land into tobacco production to support his growing family. He also held a partnership with Wilfre Turner in a milling operation. Over the years, nine children were born, eight of whom lived into the twentieth century. W. T. Gaither died intestate in the 1880s. The court, in a special proceeding, directed that the Gaither property be sold at public auction and appointed F. B. Gaither as administrator. On April 5, 1886, Mary Elizabeth Gaither purchased her deceased husband’s home and 200 acres for $351, enough to cover the outstanding debts.

Among the Gaither children was Faison Bell, born in April, 1860. Virtually nothing could be found about his early life except that he was well educated and had acquired a license to practice dentistry by 1900. He apparently never married, for at age forty he was a bachelor living in his mother’s household. Bell (as he preferred to be called) constructed near the house a one-story frame structure which housed a country store and his dentist office. At the time, it was a convenient location at the forks of two major roads feeding into the road to Harmony and Salisbury. The office and store building has since been moved and converted into a residence, no longer forming a part of the historical environs of the Gaither house.

As his mother advanced in years, Dr. Bell Gaither seems to have taken over her role as head of household. Title to the property still belonged to his mother, but maps of the period and local tradition clearly show that people in the area considered the home to be that of Bell Gaither. Mary Elizabeth died in 1930 in her ninety-fifth year. Her will bequeathed her property to her seven surviving children in common. The one-seventh share received by Bell Gaither was the only title he ever held to the house and grounds. When the court divided the land among the heirs in 1932, the house tract of fifty-two acres was allotted to Mary Lacy Gaither.\(^{12}\) It is unclear whether or not Bell Gaither continued to live in the house after this date, but he was then seventy-two years old and destined to live no more than six years.\(^{13}\)

Mary Elizabeth Gaither's will refers to Mary Lacy Gaither as one of her children; however, the 1900 census shows Mary Lacy to be a widow. Furthermore, one of the children of Mary Elizabeth and W. T. Gaither had died before 1900, suggesting that one of the Gaither sons had married Mary Lacy. Therefore, it seems reasonable to assume that Mary Lacy Gaither was in fact the daughter-in-law of Mary Elizabeth, who treated her as if she were a biological daughter.\(^{14}\) Mary Lacy had been left a widow by age thirty. In 1900 she was living with Mary Elizabeth and Dr. Bell Gaither in the W. T. Gaither home. She apparently continued to reside there until her death in 1938, at which time the house and fifty-two acres passed to her nieces Gladys Brandon Tally and Ruby Brandon Barron. Less than a year later, the sisters sold the house and acreage to the current owner, T. R. Holden.\(^{15}\) The outbuildings now on the premises were constructed by Holden after his 1939 purchase.
