The Herman Green House is located at 5500 Lake Wheeler Road (SR1371) in the southern corner of Raleigh in Wake County, North Carolina. The two-story, Colonial Revival-style house faces east with its outbuildings situated behind it to the west. The house was built around 1911 for Herman P. Green, a local farmer. The house is located in an area of Wake County that has experienced a great deal of development in the last decade. Although the area around the house has become increasingly developed, the Herman Green House maintains a high degree of historic integrity with respect to location, setting, design, workmanship, feeling, and association. It is in excellent condition and has recently undergone rehabilitation. The remaining acreage associated with the house is just under two acres. The land around the house has been developed into modern subdivisions in the last decade. Mature oaks draw attention to the Green House which is set back from the road. The house is centered on the property consisting of level ground with historic plantings and trees including oaks, crape myrtle, and magnolia. A modern wood fence encloses the back yard. Two historic outbuildings and one ruin co-exist with three new outbuildings.

The exterior of the ca. 1911 Herman Green House illustrates a stately interpretation of the early twentieth century Colonial Revival style in rural Wake County. A hipped slate roof protects the two-story, three-bay frame house. A transom and sidelights surround a central, half-glazed entrance door. Doric-style columns, a molded handrail, and original plain balustrade support the one-story, hip roof wraparound porch. The porch roof material has been replaced with asphalt shingles. A decorative center front gable contains a double-hung one-over-one wood sash window. All other windows are original one-over-one double-hung wood sash windows. Original weatherboard with cornerboards, a wide frieze, and molded cornice trim the exterior. Two brick chimneys with corbeled caps pierce the roofline.

The north side elevation is two bays wide with the two-bay rear ell attached to the west. A bay window protrudes from the first floor containing three double-hung one-over-one windows.

The rear elevation illustrates the changes and evolution of the Green House. The main, hip-roof block is evident with the one-story kitchen ell projecting from the north end of this elevation. The gabled end of the ell is an enclosed pediment with a single-shoulder brick chimney of patterned brick and a corbeled cap. On the south side of the ell is an enclosed hip-roofed porch that now contains a small breakfast room. A two-story, hip-roof addition contains the bathrooms added in the early twentieth century. The front porch extends across the south side elevation. The first floor openings include a half-glazed door on the rear end.

Interior:

The Colonial Revival-style house follows the center-hall, two-room deep plan on both levels. The parlor and dining room are located on the north side; a second parlor and bedroom on the south side. The center hall contains the main stair rising from the front. A large newel post marks the base of the stair. It is square in shape with a reeded shaft, and a beveled cap adorned with egg-and-dart motif. A second, less ornate corner stair with two flights and a landing rises at the back of the hall. Fireplaces are found in each of the rooms, with more elaborate mantels in the parlor and dining rooms to the north. Pocket doors with six-horizontal-panel configuration access the parlor north of the hall. A second set of pocket doors connects the parlor to the dining room. A bay window illuminates the dining room. Both rooms have elaborate mantels of Colonial Revival style. All doors have five horizontal panels. The parlor and bedroom across the hall are similar but less ornate. The master bedroom, in the southwest corner, has a half-glazed door leading to the porch. An enlarged bathroom has also been added in the northwest corner. A small, closet in the rear of the hall was converted into a half-bath. The first floor rooms are finished with original wood floors, wide baseboards, plain door and window surrounds with molded caps, and crown moldings.

The main stair leads to the center hall of the second floor. A pair of newel posts terminate the stair. Both are reeded but lack the egg-and-dart design. One terminates the handrail of the stair, the second terminates the handrail of the second floor balustrade. The four bedrooms have simple wood mantels with pilasters and molded shelves, wood floors, wide baseboards, plain window and door surrounds with molded caps, and six-horizontal-panel wood doors. A bathroom was added shortly after construction to the west side of the hall and maintains its original claw-foot bathtub.

Interior alterations are few and do not detract from the interior integrity of this home. The current owner has made a couple of cosmetic changes including a chair rail to some of the rooms. Two bathrooms have been added to the first floor, a full bath was added to the back bedroom, and a first floor closet has been renovated into a half bath. The rear porch was also enclosed and now serves as a breakfast room. The alterations are easily interpreted as recent changes.

Outbuilding Inventory:

The inventory is keyed to the attached map.

1. Picnic Shelter. Ca. 2000. Noncontributing structure. A frame picnic shelter with metal roof is located behind the house. It was built by the current owner surrounding an earlier five-to-one common bond brick chimney.

2. Smokehouse/Office/Storage Building. Ca. 1911/1930s/1990s. Noncontributing building. A one-story, one-bay, gable-front, frame smokehouse sheathed with weatherboard and capped with a metal roof appears to be original to the house. A one-story, one-bay, gable-front, frame office building was moved to the property. It has been placed next to the smokehouse. A third building was built next to the other two in the 1990s. It has a flat roof and is connected to the other two buildings by a shed-roof porch that spans the facades of all three buildings.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Summary:

The Herman Green House meets National Register of Historic Places Criterion C for architecture because it is an excellent example of the Colonial Revival style of architecture in rural Wake County. The house was built ca. 1911 for farmer Herman Green, and it maintains a high degree of integrity with respect to location, design, materials, workmanship, and association. The house which is in excellent condition, is being rehabilitated by the current owner.

Historic and architectural context for the Herman Green House is included in the multiple property documentation form (MPDF) entitled “Historic and Architectural Resources of Wake County, North Carolina (ca. 1770-1941) in Context 3: Populism to Progressivism (1885-1918), pages E51-55. The Green House has the physical characteristics of Property Type 3B: Houses built between the Civil War and World War II, described on page F134. The house meets the Registration Requirements for this property type on pages F141-142.

Historical Background:

Little is known about Herman Green (1870-1956). The earliest record found for him is in the 1902 Voter Registration Records when he registered to vote at the age of thirty-three. He is listed in the 1910 Wake County Census Records as forty years old, married to Roxanna, age thirty-eight. They are listed with twin boys, Herman and Phares age three, and one baby daughter, Jane living in Swift Creek Township. Ten years later in the 1920 census, the Greens had added another set of twins to their family. The boys, named Robert and Ernest are listed as being nine years old.

Earlier census records list Herman Green’s wife, Roxanna or Anna as the daughter of Phares Yates. Phares Yates operated Yates Mill during the late nineteenth century. The mill, also in the Swift Creek Township, is approximately one-quarter of a mile from the Herman Green House (Lally, p. 395).

Deed references for the Herman Green House lead to an 1866 deed (Book 28, page 400) between James Penny and the buyer, Phares Yates, for fifty acres. A second deed reference (Book 238, page 426) is between W. C. Douglas, Commissioner to H. P. Green in 1909. This deed is for the fifty acres that Green purchased at public auction. Both of these deeds are referenced in the 1986 deed transferring the property from the Green family to the South Fork Development Company. Based on the date of the 1909 deed and the age of his children it is estimated that Herman Green built his large home around 1911. The multiple property documentation form and publication “The Historic Architecture of Wake County, North Carolina” both date the house to the early twentieth century.
Herman P. Green, a farmer, lived his entire life in Wake County and died in Wake County in 1956 at the age of eighty-six (News and Observer, May 4, 1956). He was survived by his wife and five grown children. Jane Green Deese, daughter of Herman Green, ultimately inherited the house and owned it until 1986. At that time the South Fork Development Company purchased the land and Jane Green Deese continued to live in the house until 1996. The Buffaloe family purchased the property in 1996. Owner, Hope Buffaloe, has carefully rehabilitated the Herman Green house for her private residence.

The Herman Green House is an important reminder of a time when Lake Wheeler Road was just a country road in southern Wake County. Many rural farmhouses and farm property have been lost to new development and sprawl in this area. Although new subdivisions surround the Herman Green House, it stands as a stately and vital reminder of the history of Swift Creek Township in southern Wake County.

Architecture Context:

The Colonial Revival style of architecture became popular in the United States in the late nineteenth century and maintained its popularity well into the mid-twentieth century. North Carolina followed national trend and embraced the style throughout the state. Among the most prevalent forms of the Colonial Revival style house in North Carolina is the rectangular plan, two-story, centered door type, with a one-story, full-width porch with classical columns. This simple definition of the style is interpreted in both simple and exuberant examples throughout the state of North Carolina.

In Wake County, “the Colonial Revival appeared in hip- or pyramidal-roofed foursquare houses with symmetrical facades, dormer windows, trabeated entrances, and Doric-columned full-façade or wrap-around porches (Lally, MPDF, p. F1324).” Rural farmhouses tend to be simpler versions of the Colonial Revival style while colossal porches and other classical references are usually found on more ambitious dwellings. The typical rural house built in the early twentieth century was usually a simple frame home with a tri-gable form or pyramidal cottage. The Rowland-Jones House near Apex is representative of the typical Wake County farmhouse. It is a one-story house with hipped roof, known as a pyramidal cottage. A centered front gable accents the roofline and the Doric-columned porch references the Colonial Revival style.

The two-story, hip-roof, center-hall plan is also typical of the Colonial Revival style in the early twentieth century. In southern Wake County the Green House is exemplary. There are two other examples that are closely related to the Green House, both are in southern Wake County. The Richard and Annie Adams
House is located in the vicinity of Holly Springs, west of the Green House. The turn-of- the-century house is also a two-story, three-bay, hip-roof frame Colonial Revival style home with two tall chimneys piercing the roof. Like the Green House, the Adams House also has a centered gable. The two-over-two sash windows, an earlier window style, reflect the house’s circa 1900 construction date. The porches are both wraparound with Doric columns, however, the Adams House has a pediment at the entry. This earlier version of the Colonial Revival most closely resembles the Herman Green House.

The T.H. Stephenson House is in the town of Fuquay-Varina, located south of the Green House. While the Green House is a farmhouse, the Stephenson House is a town house. The Stephenson House, built around 1914, is a two-story, hip-roof house with centered gables on the front and side elevations, and tall brick chimneys with corbelled caps. The roof of the Stephenson House is covered with metal, as opposed to the Green House slate roof. The Stephenson House porch wraps around three sides of the house and has a pedimented entrance bay. It also features Craftsman-style, three-over-one double-hung windows that may be replacements. Although there are subtle differences between the Stephenson House and the Herman Green House these differences illustrate the versatile nature of the style and its different interpretations throughout Wake County.

The Herman Green House is a wonderfully preserved example of the simple Colonial Revival style found in rural Wake County. In The Historic Architecture of Wake County, NC, Author Kelly Lally states, “A perfect example of the pared down versions of the Colonial Revival found throughout the county, the Herman Green House displays a symmetrical façade, a prominent entrance surrounds by sidelights and transom, and a Doric-columned wraparound porch (Lally, p. 108).” In addition to its intact exterior details including slate roof, the interior of the Herman Green House maintains its Colonial Revival style features. Wood floors, reeded newel posts, elaborate mantels, pocket doors, and two sets of stairs compose the original Colonial Revival appointments.
