The Mordecai Place Historic District is located just northeast of downtown Raleigh. It is bordered on the west and north by the CSX railroad track, on the east by Old Wake Forest Road, on the south by the locally designated North Blount Street Historic District, and on southeast by the Oakwood Historic District (NR).

Mordecai Place Historic District includes approximately fifteen blocks of frame and brick buildings, principally single-family residences, constructed between c. 1916-1947. The district's buildings include the late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth century Mordecai House, a few houses constructed on a 1916 subdivision of a small portion of the Mordecai plantation, and those built after a major subdivision of the plantation lands in 1922. There are 181 contributing buildings and one contributing object, and sixty one non-contributing buildings and one non-contributing object. Seventy-five per cent of resources are contributing, and twenty-five per cent are non-contributing.

The few non-residential resources in the district include a former school (#1 on the inventory list, a church (#2), a small motor lodge (#201) and the Mordecai Historic Park (#231). This park includes the Mordecai House (NR), a preserved late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth century plantation house operated as a house museum, and other small historic buildings, including the Andrew Johnson Birthplace (NR) and the locally designated Badger-Iredell Law Office. Most of the buildings in the park were moved from elsewhere in Raleigh and piedmont North Carolina, preserved here and used for various educational purposes.

The historic district contains a broad range of house types located on small lots. This mix of types includes bungalows, Foursquares, I-houses, Cape Cods, and various period revival styles popular in the early twentieth century, including Georgian and Colonial Revival, Tudor, Dutch Colonial Revival, Spanish Mission, and Italian Renaissance Revival. There are also some modest post-Depression and War II-era houses with Minimal Traditional elements. Some of the lots contain small modern sheds located at the rear, but these structures, generally not visible from the street, do not detract from the overall character of the historic district.

The Mordecai neighborhood, with its rich variety of house types and forms is an excellent example of the housing developments that existed before modern suburban tract house developments. The typical house in the Mordecai neighborhood occupies more of its small lot than is usually found in post-World War II suburban development, giving it a pedestrian-scaled environment. The district has a dense tree cover with its picturesque streets shaded by many large trees, with oaks predominating. The streets are laid out in a hybrid-grid pattern with the major arteries running in a northeast to southwest axis. Major defining elements include the railroad corridor which runs along the northwest edge of the district, and Wake Forest Road (U.S. 1) east of the neighborhood. Many of the yards are carefully landscaped with old, well-tended gardens. The landscape, the tight development pattern, and the varied houses combine to create an ambience evocative of the 1920s, the district's major growth period.

The earliest development in the area was the Pilot Mill and mill village erected between 1895 and the early 1900s on the western edge of the former Mordecai plantation. The mill housing was all razed in 1961. Nothing remains of that community except for the former Pilot School (#1) and the c. 1917 Pilot Baptist Church (#2). The previously developed church lot property appears on the 1922 subdivision map, labeled as "church." The church continues in operation today. The little altered one-story brick school building, constructed in 1924, probably was utilized by students from the mill village as well as the new adjoining Mordecai neighborhood, developed by Dan and Frank Allen in the 1920s. Today, it has been adapted for use as the Together Neighborhood Center, serving as a center for various after-school programs. Although these survivors of the mill village are not directly related to the architectural development of the adjoining early twentieth-century neighborhood, they are visually linked and historically connected to the district's development.

The largest and grandest of the district's houses are found within a one-block radius of the elegant plantation house, on Mordecai Street, and Old Wake Forest Road (known as Louisburg Road until the early 1920s) on lots exempted from the 1922 sales contract. Large Georgian and and Colonial Revival-style houses were popular design choices here. The 800 block of Old Wake Forest Road contains two good, little altered examples of brick Georgian Revival style houses (#s 214 and 215). Both c. 1920 houses, set on unusually large lots, are thought to have been designed by architect James S. Salter and both display variations on features typical of the style. This includes their symmetrical five-bay wide, double-pile form, ornate paneled front doors with sidelights and fanlights, classical columns, wide cornices... ornamented with dentil courses and, on #215, three gabled dormers with round arched heads.

Another handsome, intact Georgian Revival-style house is the Boushall House (#213) located nearby and designed in 1912 by Rose and Linthicam Architects for banker, John Boushall. This imposing brick house, now in use as a residence and antiques shop, is dominated by a monumental two-story front portico carried by fluted columns with Corinthian capitals.

A group of good examples of brick Colonial Revival-style houses, all constructed c. 1920, is found in the 800 block of Mordecai Drive (#s 129, 130, and 131). Each is a substantial two-story brick house with six-over-six windows. The Landon Hill House (#129) is particularly well detailed with a molded wood cornice with returns and main entrance with pedimented gable, fluted columns and a paneled main entrance with transom and sidelights. It is used as a residence and an interior design shop, Robert Black Interiors.

Other brick Classical Revival houses include the J.A. Jones House (#120) and the house at 1107 Old Wake Forest Road (#212). The J.A. Jones House has a particularly graceful entry porch with a lattice-work demi-lune, and an open side porch, both carried by slender Doric columns. Although it is somewhat deteriorated, #212 retains some suggestion of its early elegance represented by the marble cherub fountain in the front yard.

Frame Classical Revival houses are also found in the district. For example, the two-story house at 1216 Mordecai Drive (#167) is ornamented by full-height pilasters on the main elevation, pedimented gable, and demi-lunes over the six-over-six windows. The Pou-Massengill-Lundy House (#191) is a dignified two-story frame Georgian Revival house on Old Wake Forest Road. It was carefully restored in 1996. The restoration followed years of neglect and inappropriate alterations. Among other changes, aluminum siding was removed and the original wide clapboards, repaired and painted. The results of its interior restoration was equally dramatic with, among many other changes, the original pocket doors taken out of attic storage and replaced in their original parlor and living room locations.

In the district there are several good, intact examples of the Dutch Colonial Revival style executed in brick with trademark gambrel roof, such as the McKinney House (#204) on Old Wake Forest Road. Another brick example is the house at 1105 Mordecai Drive (#126). Frame examples include the Neil Hester House (#134) also on Mordecai Drive. It has shed-roof dormers and a full-facade front porch carried by square posts.
Tudor Revival is another popular style in the district. There are good examples of this romantic style rendered in brick (#s 79, 98, 103 and 147), stone (#s 111 and 177) and in frame (#172). The stone Tudor Revival-style house at 1309 Mordecai (#111) is nicely detailed with a characteristic steeply pitched gable roof, and heavy plank door with decorative metal straps. The Gables Motor Lodge (#201) is a prominent example of the style located on Old Wake Forest Road. The stone building was built in the late 1920s by William and Ella Johnson to take advantage of the increasing tourist automobile traffic on what was then known as U.S. 1. After her husband's death, Mrs. Johnson continued to operate the motel into the 1940s. The building now has a two-story rear addition and continues in operation as a motor lodge today.

There is a lone example of the Spanish Mission Revival style represented by the c. 1920 Adams House (#176) at 1419 Old Wake Forest Road. It is set back on a steep ridge on the road and hidden from view by overgrown landscaping and its location. It is intact with an arched entrance and engaged porch. There is a matching stone garage in the rear yard.

There is also one example of the Italian Renaissance Revival style in the Thompson House (#186). This c. 1920 blond brick house occupies a prominent corner on Old Wake Forest Road. The two-story center block is flanked by one-story wings. The intact house retains the Doric columns, nine-over-nine and six-over-six windows, and carved wooden brackets in the wide overhanging eaves.

More commonly found in rural settings, there are two neighboring frame I-houses on busy Old Wake Forest Road (#s 184 and 185). Each intact gable-roofed three-bay wide house has an attached, hip-roofed full-width porch carried by Doric columns.

There are a few little-altered, good examples of Foursquare style houses in the district on Mordecai Drive (#s 158 and 170). The Isley House displays the style's characteristic cubical form and hip roof. Both houses are covered with weatherboards and have multi-pane sash windows. An interesting example of the Foursquare is the intact brick duplex built in 1933 (#95). It retains the original paired six-over-six windows with stone sills.

The most common house type in the district is the Craftsman-style bungalow. There are numerous good, unaltered examples of this nationally popular style, rendered in brick, frame, and stucco. Several representative small brick examples are found on Courtland Drive including the house at 1403 (#21). It has a hip roof with hip-roofed dormers, original three-over-one windows and sawn shingles in the gable ends. The porch, carried by square wood posts set on brick plinths, is typical. A commonly seen variation is a porch that extends to encompass a porte-cochere (#39). The house at 1315 Courtland (#34) is one of several that have a distinctive bungalow porch with large, outsized stuccoed posts set on brick plinths. An unusual frame bungalow on Courtland (#78) displays a second level sleeping porch on the main elevation. An unaltered two-story stucco covered bungalow is located at 1119 Mordecai Drive (#117). The house at 1207 Old Wake Forest Road (#205) is a fine example of a classic, brick, gable-front bungalow. It has wide eaves and knee braces and a welcoming front porch framed by a wide arch and held by brick columns. Other intact representative examples include #s 69, 149, 202 and 221.

The Cape Cod style was popular built in brick as well as frame. One of the best examples is the house at 1315 Mordecai Drive (#107), a classic frame Cape Cod built about 1938, with steeply pitched gable-side roof, six-over-six windows and a side porch. Other relatively unaltered examples include #s 73, 94, 101, 136 and 153.

Construction largely ceased during the years of World War II, but commenced again in 1943-46 utilizing a style Virginia and Lee McAlester have termed "Minimal Traditional." These houses generally have smaller floor areas, a diminished scale, an absence of roof eaves, and facade chimneys and gables. Two good examples are found at 301 and 309 Poplar St. (#s 224 and 225). They, along with later ranch houses (including #s 100 and 163), fill out the districts housing stock. Modern apartments were built in the 1970s and 1980s on some of the remaining lots (#s 23-25, for instance.) The newest construction in the district is the house at 1427 Mordecai Dr. (#86) constructed in 1991. It is quite compatible in scale and materials with the surrounding historic buildings.
INVENTORY LIST MORDECAI PLACE HISTORIC DISTRICT

C - Contributing building or object

191. C Pou-Massengill-Lundy House
1315 Old Wake Forest Rd.
c. 1923

Attorney James H. Pou constructed this handsome two-and-one-half story, five-bay, frame, Neo-Georgian-style house in the early 1920s. Current owners Sam Massengill and Woody Lundy bought the house in 1994. They are carefully restoring it, removing the inappropriate alterations that occurred during the 1940s when the structure was a boarding house. The house also suffered deterioration from an almost thirty year vacancy, when its owners, Edmund and Virginia Fogg, lived most of the year in West Virginia. Massengill and Lundy have removed the aluminum siding and repaired the original clapboards; replaced the pocket doors which had been stored in the attic; removed three layers of wallpaper and repaired the plaster walls; opened closed fireplaces; replicated the original windows; floored the attic; jacked the house several times to repair the foundation; restored the kitchen with period-appropriate cabinets; and restored the original porch. 1 Mimosa St.
231a. C Mordecai House (NR)
1785; 1824 expansion
231b. C Andrew Johnson Birthplace c. 1795 (NR)
Centerpiece of the neighborhood named for it, the Mordecai Historic Park consists of the plantation house, a two-story frame vernacular farm house expanded in 1824 by architect William Nichols in the fashionable Greek Revival style, and various other small buildings, both original and relocated to the park. The Mordecai House is adaptively used as a house museum and center for historical activities. The park contains a variety of historic buildings, moved to the site from various locations. Of particular interest is the Andrew Johnson birthplace, a gambrel-roofed former tavern kitchen building with massive double-shoulder chimney; the recreated kitchen garden; Badger-Iredell Law Office, a frame law office used by George E. Badger, Judge, US Senator and Secretary of the Navy. It was later used by James Iredell, also a Judge, Senator and NC Governor; and St. Mark's Chapel, a small frame church with steeple on the main elevation. The historic Mordecai House was once the seat of one of the largest plantations in Wake County. Today several Raleigh neighborhoods, including the Mordecai Historic District, Historic Oakwood and Hayes-Earlton, are located on former Mordecai land.

(for further information, see NR nomination "Mordecai Historic Park" and extensive working files about the creation of the park, found at the Survey & Planning Office, Division of Archives and History, Raleigh).

Nichols, William
The Mordecai Place Historic District is locally significant under Criterion A for significance in the history of community development, and under Criterion C for significance in the history of architecture. The name Mordecai Place commemorates the location of the early-twentieth-century residential development on the former plantation lands of the Mordecai family whose late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth-century plantation house (NR 1970) stands within the southern quadrant of the historic district. Planned and developed in two stages, Mordecai Place joins numerous other early Raleigh subdivisions platted on former plantations that circled North Carolina’s capital. The first stage of development dates from 1916, and was commenced on land south of the Mordecai House by Claude Denson who sold subdivided building lots. The major stage of development was launched north of the house in 1922 by local real estate developers Dan and Frank Allen who optioned some eighty-nine acres of land from Miss Martha Mordecai subject to a carefully-defined purchase agreement. Among Miss Mordecai’s stipulations were that the acreage be subdivided and platted within sixty days of the purchase agreement; that the neighborhood name reflect its Mordecai Plantation roots; that Mordecai Avenue be extended; and that she receive a total of $85,000 within three years of the purchase date. The neighborhood plat was recorded September 11, 1922, and the small lots on the modified-grid-streets were quickly filled with a variety of houses that reflected the popular residential building styles of the day, together with a few examples of architect-designed houses. The solid Colonial Revival-style houses south of the Mordecai House were designed by James S. Salter; while the imposing Neo-Classical Revival House at 1101 Old Wake Forest Road was designed by the firm of Rose and Linthicum for banker John Echshall. The overall architectural fabric of the neighborhood reflects the middle-class taste that defined the character of the suburbs that burgeoned across the state during the years between the two world wars. Mordecai Place examples include the Tudor Revival house at 1309 Mordecai Drive; the Dutch Colonial Revival-style Hester House at 1426 Mordecai Drive; the ubiquitous bungalow at 1216 Courtland Drive; and the late 1930s examples of Minimal Traditional houses at 301 and 309 Poplar Street. Taken as a whole, Mordecai Place, with its heavily-shaded streets of representative popular house styles, represents its 1916-1947 period of significance and the era during which North Carolina's capital became a twentieth-century city that included such similar suburbs as 1907 Glenwood (NR 1983), 1907 Bynum Heights (NR 1983), 1914 Cameron Park, 1920 Hayes Barton, and 1922 Roanoke Park. The major period of significance for the Mordecai Place Historic District is 1916 through 1947, an era that encompasses the initial 1916 plating of the plantation lands, through the National Register fifty-year cut-off. The secondary period of significance, 1785 and 1924, represents the initial building date of the Mordecai Plantation House, and the date of its significant Greek Revival addition. Mordecai House was individually listed in the National Register in 1970 for local significance in the history of architecture.

Historical Background and Community Development Context:

The Mordecai Plantation was established in the late eighteenth century, with the plantation house located to take advantage of the drinking water supply provided by two springs still in existence a short distance west and north of the house.
site [Mordecai NR nomination]. The Mordecai family played a prominent role in the development of the city of Raleigh, and were particularly noted in the legal profession. Located just northeast of downtown Raleigh, which was surveyed and planned in 1792 as the state capital, the acreage around the Mordecai Plantation remained farm land until the late nineteenth century. Family members lived in the plantation house on steadily diminishing acreage until 1970, when the house and the residual surrounding city block were sold to the city of Raleigh for use as an historical park [Mordecai House survey file, Survey and Planning Branch, State Historic Preservation Office].

The death of Henry Mordecai in 1875 led to a partitioning of the family's vast acreage and the subsequent development of several of Raleigh's earliest east side suburban neighborhoods. Oakwood (NR, 1974), located northeast of the 1792 city limits, was laid out on an orthogonal grid that continued the original city plan. The small urban lots were quickly filled with popular Victorian-era styles occupied by white, middle-class professionals and tradesmen. South Park, Battery Heights, and College Park were likewise continuations of the original city grid and densely developed to house African-American tradesmen. As streetcar routes expanded into north and west Raleigh, suburbs were developed on land that had been the antebellum plantation lands of other prominent Raleigh families, and on the grounds of the North Carolina State Fair. These neighborhoods included Glenwood and Boylan Heights, developed in 1907; Cameron Park, platted in 1914; Hayes-Barton begun in 1920; and Roanoke Park and Mordecai, both initiated in 1922 [Early Twentieth-Century Suburbs in North Carolina; Wake County Plat Maps 1920, p. 110 and Wake County Deed Book 427, pp. 551-554].

The earliest development near the early nineteenth-century Mordecai plantation house occurred in 1894 when William and James Williamson purchased land adjacent to the newly created Seaboard Air Line Railroad track corridor that ran in a northeasterly direction about one-quarter mile to the north of the house. The Williamsons constructed the Pilot Mill, located a few blocks west of the Mordecai House and just two blocks north of the Raleigh city limits that had been expanded after an annexation in 1881. The site was prime for industrial use because of convenient rail transportation and the availability of electricity. The mill village erected north and west of the mill along the railroad tracks included housing for about 300 families, and a frame Baptist church where school was conducted until 1924, when a brick school building was constructed [Ross, "Raleigh Architectural Survey: Final Report"]. The mill housing was razed in 1981, but the mill, the c. 1917 church (#2) and school (#1) survive on the western edge of the district on North Blount Street.

In 1915 the Mordecai Curtilage was mapped and recorded in the Wake County Register of Deeds Office [1915 Maps, p. 45]. With the homestead and outbuildings defined and protected, Martha (Patty) Mordecai began selling substantial tracts of the farmland which still surrounded the family home. In 1916 she sold a D-shaped tract south of the house bounded by No. Blount Street, between E. Franklin and Pine streets to Claude Denson. He developed houses on at least seven of the lots [Wake County Deed Book 307, p. 141]. Three substantial brick houses from that development survive (#s 129, 130 and 131) on Mordecai Street and now anchor the southern edge of the historic district.

In April, 1917 she sold the Pilot Baptist Church trustees a lot on No. Blount Street. It is not clear whether this building replaced an earlier church associated with the Pilot Mills.

In 1922 local real estate developers Dan and Frank Allen incorporated Mordecai Place, Inc. and purchased 88.6 acres north of the Mordecai House. This purchase exempted the church lot and almost all of the lots along the west side of Wake Forest Road between Poplar and Sycamore streets, and some along Hinton Street (now known as Courtland), presumably because they were already sold or reserved. Most of these were single or double lots, but M.T. Dortch had purchased twenty-four lots and Mrs. H.H. Nowell had bought five lots. [Wake County Deed Book 427, pp. 551-554].

The purchase contract specified that the Allens were to have the property subdivided and platted within sixty days and that Martha Mordecai was to receive $85,000 for the tract in installments due in total within three years. It also specifies that the neighborhood "be named 'Mordecai Place' or in some other way that will perpetuate the name 'Mordecai', and Mordecai Avenue shall be extended. ... and such extension be named 'Mordecai Avenue'" [Wake Co. Deed Bock 427, p. 551-554]. It goes on to specify that none of the lots except those bordering the railroad would be sold for factory or industrial, store, or hospital or sanitarium use. The contract also sets aside about eighteen acres bounded on the east by Blount Street, along the railway, to be sold for the "occupancy by Negroes or by factories." With this lengthy and detailed document, Martha Mordecai shaped the subdivision that the Allens would Martha Mordecai's name fills several pages of the Wake County Deed Indexes and all of the deeds and contracts are quite specific about how her family acreage could be used, and most contain a prohibition against Negro residents, a common restriction of the time.

Daniel Allen's obituary in the December 17, 1929 Raleigh News and Observer records that he was "Raleigh's largest real estate dealer" and called him the "...very heart and soul of the realty business in the capital. He had invested more money, paid more taxes, extended more uncertain sections and constructed more handsome houses than anybody who lived in the capital. He never lost his head when all about him were going wild over fictitious wealth in New York."

Allen was a native of Raleigh and a graduate of North Carolina State University, where a campus road is named for him. "He put hundreds of thousands into Cameron Park, Wilmor, Mordecai Heights, Fairmont and other suburban sections and more than any man in Raleigh he is responsible for the growth of the capital." [Raleigh News and Observer, December 17, 1929]. The newspaper obituary continues saying that "Raleigh overbuilt but Mr. Allen lost no sleep over it. When Raleigh stopped going north, east, west and south, Mr. Allen turned his mind to the interior waiting for the comeback of his old business." A letter to the Editor of the News and Observer on the fifteenth anniversary of the passing "of one of Raleigh's foremost citizens" notes that he was responsible for several of the town's landmark skyscrapers including the Raleigh Building and the Lawyers' Building [Raleigh News and Observer, December 15, 1944].

The Mordecais, like other local large land owners, sold their plantation acreage to developers who were marketing to the rising middle class who could afford to build suburban homes due to the development of good roads and transportation systems, economical building methods, and increased availability of home mortgages. The streets in the Mordecai Place Historic District were platted by 1922 according to a City Planning and Zoning Department map drawn that year [Map of Raleigh. "Buildings Erected Since 1914" drawn by Jefferson Grinnald, Consulting Engineers, Baltimore]. The modified grid streets, designed to compliment the topography, were named after the Mordecai family and after the types of trees found on the plantation. The most prestigious lots were those located within a one-block radius of the Mordecai House, along Mordecai Drive and Old Wake Forest Road and some fine brick Colonial Revival style homes were constructed there in the 1910s and 1920s. Another development that shaped the neighborhood directly to the east of the historic house was the routing of America’s "first Main Street," U.S. Route 1, along Old Wake Forest Road [Ross, "Final Report"]. The additional traffic generated by visitors and travelers was phenomenal. Several tourist courts and boarding houses were built along this main highway artery just on the outskirts of Raleigh. One of these, The Gables (#201), continues in operation today.

Located between the railroad tracks and highway, a dense neighborhood of bungalows and period revival style houses, housing middle class managers, workers, and artisans grew up.
In 1923 the west side of the 1400 block of Courtland Drive was developed by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. with a group of one and one-and-one-half story brick and frame houses [Wake County Plat Maps Book 1920, p. 110]. They appear to have been rental properties because there was a high turnover of occupants according to the City Directories from the 1920s and 1930s.
Numerous occupations were represented among the residents including railroad workers, salesmen, office personnel, and mill employees. Other clandestine occupations may have resulted in the local appellation of this street as "Bootlegger's Row."
In the early 1940s the Federal Housing Administration was responsible for the construction of five Minimal Traditional houses on the east side of this block of Courtland Drive [Ross survey, working files].

The earliest multi-unit dwelling in the district is located at 1107 Mordecai Drive (#125), one-half block north of the Mordecai House. Built in the early 1920s, this three-story frame hip-roofed apartment building, was first occupied by government employees, sales people and utility workers [City Directories]. Also in the 1920s, a large number of bungalows and various period revival style houses were built in the district by individuals or small contractors/developers.

After the Depression, the neighborhood filled out with Minimal Traditional houses and Cape Cod houses. The few vacant lots, the least desirable or the hardest to build on, have been occupied in recent years by non-contributing apartment buildings and brick duplexes. Although several of the resources are now considered non-contributing due to their early 1930s construction dates, they are indeed compatible with their historic neighbors and will soon be eligible to be counted as historic resources.
The great variety of architectural styles represented in the Mordecai Place Historic District makes a varied and lively streetscape. Today, the Mordecai Historic District is considered a convenient, desirable, and stable in-town neighborhood. The rich variety of houses are well cared for and appreciated by their residents who are of diverse ages and occupations. The Mordecai Historic Park, utilized by students of architectural and garden history, still, as always, enjoys its position as the anchor of the neighborhood.

Architectural Context:

The Mordecai Place Historic District is one of four early twentieth-century neighborhoods that ring the nineteenth-century city of Raleigh. Three of the districts, Glenwood, Boylan Heights and Cameron Park, are already listed on the National Register. They, along with Mordecai, all developed on the former farmlands of founding Raleigh families. The Mordecai district shares some features with these nearby districts including their sylvan settings, street layouts which took advantage of picturesque topography, and the types and styles of the dwellings erected. The development of these neighborhoods owes much to their easy access to downtown via street cars and automobiles [Early Twentieth-Century Suburbs]. Each displays an eclectic variety of architectural styles, creating visually lively streetscapes. Each district grew up as a response to the need for housing the middle class in an urbanizing and rapidly growing capital city. In 1900 Raleigh's population was 13,643; in 1920 it was 27,076; and in 1940 it had mushroomed to 46,897 [North Carolina Information and Fact Book p. 42].

The Mordecai Place Historic District contains a largely intact collection of early-twentieth-century dwellings including the bungalow, Colonial Revival and various romantic period revival styles such as Dutch Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival, and Spanish Colonial Revival, all popularized by pattern books or popular publications. A comparison of the inventory lists of the previously listed districts reveals that the Mordecai district appears to have a wider and more diverse variety of architectural styles represented. In contrast, Boylan Heights is dominated by bungalows, the Glenwood district by small cottages, and Cameron Park by the Colonial Revival box and Queen Anne styles.

Only a handful of Mordecai's buildings have been identified as the work of architects. Most seem to have been built from pattern books and fall into the popular building traditions. They are built of frame or brick (veneer) and nearly all are single family dwellings. Notable exceptions include the three-story frame Mordecai Manor apartment building (#125) and the Foursquare brick duplex at 1403-1405 Mordecai Dr. (#95). Architect-designed houses are generally found on the lots nearest the Mordecai House (#231a), which has an 1824 expansion designed by William Nichols. These architects include James S. Salter, thought to be responsible for the two sizable Georgian Revival houses in the 800 block of Old Wake Forest Road (#s 214 and 215). Banker John Boushall commissioned Rose and Linthicum Architects to design his grand Georgian Revival house at 1101 Old Wake Forest Road. (#213) [Raleigh Survey files].

Bungalows are the most prevalent style represented in the district. The style was popular here and throughout the United States in the 1920s because these were functional and comfortable houses with an open floor plan and they could be individualized according to the locale and fashions of the time. Hallmarks of the style include broad, low-pitched roofs, vertical-light windows and porch supports that combine brick piers with wood posts or columns [McAlester, Field Guide to American Houses]. Some of the porches are extended to encompass a porte-cochere meant to shelter an automobile. Several good brick examples of the bungalow are found in the 1400 block of Courtland Drive and scattered along Mordecai Drive. Most are one story, but an interesting variation is the two-story example at 1216 Courtland (#78) which has a second story California sleeping porch.

Colonial Revival was a popular and long-lived style nationwide during the early twentieth century. The Mordecai district has several excellent, unaltered examples, built in both brick and frame. The style is marked by symmetrical facades, side-gabled roofs and multi-paned sash windows. Notable examples include the trio of brick houses in the 800 block of Mordecai Drive (#s 129, 130 and 131). Frame examples are found throughout the district and include the two-story house at 1216 Mordecai (#167) and the recently restored Pou-Massengill-Lundy House (#191) on Old Wake Forest Road.

The Tudor Revival style is represented in the district by several Period Cottages rendered in brick or stone. Most were built in the 1930s employing elements of the more elaborate Tudor Revival style including front-facing cross gables, suggestions of half timbering, chimneys on the main elevation and the absence of the front porch [McAlester, Field Guide].
Good brick examples include #s 79, 98, 103 and 147. Probably the best and most detailed example of the Tudor Revival/Period Cottage is found at 1309 Mordecai Drive (#111). The most prominent example is The Gables (#201), a c. 1925 motor lodge built to take advantage of its location on heavily traveled Old Forest Road.

Other unique romantic period revival styles in the district include the Spanish Colonial Revival style house (#176) built of stone with a trademark engaged porch and arched entrance, and the Italian Renaissance Revival style Thompson House (#186), both on Old Wake Forest Road.

Adding to the district's variety are two examples of frame I-houses (#s 184 and 185), each displaying characteristic two-story, three-bay wide, single-pile forms with gable-side roofs, and the Foursquare (#s 158 and 170) with cubical main blocks and hip roofs.

After the Depression, the Recovery Era houses were generally plain, boxy, and constructed of wood. Also, Minimal Traditional houses (#s 224 and 225) appeared. These are generally small in scale and display occasional references to the Tudor Revival style, such as a chimney on the main elevation. The Colonial Revival continued its popularity, now taking the Cape Cod shape. The best example is found at 1315 Mordecai Drive (#107). It is a classic example of the Cape Cod style with a steeply pitched gable-side roof, and six-over-six windows.

In the 1960s, the long, low ranch house appeared in the district (#s 100 and 163). In the 1970s undistinguished brick apartment complexes were built on the few remaining vacant lots (#s 23, 24, and 25). The newest construction in the district (#86), has borrowed from the many bungalows surrounding it with its inviting porch, gabled roof, and compatible materials and scale.

Section 10: Boundary Description

The boundaries of the Mordecai Place Historic District are shown on the accompanying map (scale 1"=200') entitled Mordecai Place Historic District, produced by the City of Raleigh Planning Department.

Section 10: Boundary Justification

The boundaries have been drawn to include the greatest concentration of historic resources found within the original boundaries of the Mordecai neighborhood as drawn on the 1922 plats commissioned by developers Dan Allen and Frank Allen and filed in Wake County 1920 Maps, p. 110. It also includes three brick houses on Mordecai Drive which were constructed c. 1915-1920 on a tract of land Martha Mordecai sold to developer Claude Denson. Located just south of the Allen brothers' larger tract, they are an extension, both visually and stylistically, of the Mordecai Place development.

NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION

This increase in the boundary of the Mordecai Place Historic District adds the property described below to the southwest edge of the district. Visually and historically the house is part of the Mordecai Place neighborhood and was inadvertently omitted from the nomination for the district, which was listed in the National Register in 1998.

House, 208 Delway St, ca. 1925. The two-story brick-veneered house in the Colonial Revival style features a gable roof covered in slate, boxed cornices with returns, two interior end chimneys near the east gable, a two-story gabled projection on the east elevation, and a small frame, hip-roofed wing with a recessed porch (now glassed in) on the rear. The fenestration of double-hung sash windows (predominantly six-over-six) is irregular throughout. On the main façade it includes the main entrance in the east end bay and a triple window at the first story and four bays of single windows arranged in two symmetrically spaced pairs at the second story. At the main entrance, a gable-front porch supported by Tuscan columns shelters a six-panel door with sidelights. The tiled porch deck extends as a terrace across the entire main façade. Two banks of brick steps separated by a brick walk lead from the sidewalk across the terraced and landscaped front yard to the front porch.
STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

As explained in the 1998 National Register nomination, the Mordecai Place Historic District is locally significant under Criterion A in the area of community planning and development as a largely intact example of the Raleigh suburbs that emerged in the early twentieth century as the capital city experienced significant growth. The district also is important under Criterion C in the area of architecture for its collection of period revival and craftsman style houses typical of the early twentieth-century, as well as a number of larger, more distinctive architect-designed houses along the principal thoroughfare of Old Wake Forest Road.

This amendment expands the district boundary to add one property, the house at 208 Delway St., just one lot off of Old Wake Forest Road, which was inadvertently omitted from the original district nomination. Like the rest of the district, this parcel is part of the portion of the Mordecai Plantation inherited by Martha (Patsy) Mordecai, who sold off most of that land for residential development between the mid-1910s and the mid-1920s. The Mordecai Place neighborhood was developed primarily from an 88.6-acre tract sold to real estate developers Dan and Frank Allen in 1922 for the Mordecai Place subdivision. The district listed in the National Register in 1998 comprises that large tract, as well as a few other, smaller parcels sold by Patsy Mordecai, including a parcel at the south end of the district sold to Claude Denson in 1916.

The house at 208 Delway St., immediately adjacent to the Denson parcel, exhibits the handsome period revival styling of the three large houses developed by Denson but its somewhat smaller scale is more in keeping with the dwellings developed by the Allens. Visually and historically, 208 Delway St. clearly is a contributing element of the Mordecai Place neighborhood. The significance of the house at 208 Delway St. is understood within the architecture and community planning and development contexts set forth in the nomination for the Mordecai Place Historic District nomination.

Historical Background

In its association with a businessman (and his heir) throughout the district's period of significance, the house at 208 Delway St. is typical of Mordecai Place. George Little, first vice-president of Southern Railway, purchased the property from Patsy Mordecai in 1924 and built the house immediately thereafter (Wake County Deed Book 438, page 504; Wake County Map Book 1915, page 33; City of Raleigh Directory). George Little died in 1929 and his wife Virginia continued to reside in the house until her death in 1970 (City of Raleigh Directories and undated letter from owner Cameron Karcher to Jennifer Martin in N. C. State Historic Preservation Office file). Since then, the house has changed hands four times: George C. and Marjorie B. McConnell owned and occupied the house from 1971 to 1986; Jerry Maynor owned and occupied the house from 1987 to 1992; Edwin T. Bowland purchased the property in 1992; and in 1996 the current owner-occupants, Q. Cameron Karchner and John A. Williams, bought the house.
