Shortly after his ECU graduation, a gunshot wound left Chris Tyson with paraplegia. With VR assistance, he bought a van and worked on modifications with a VR rehabilitation engineer. A four-month internship with Big Rock Sports in Hamlet led to a job as corporate training/documentation supervisor.

Through VR counseling services and VR-sponsored treatment for his mental health diagnosis, Scott Tuttle began working toward his goal of becoming an appliance repairman. He now works with Atlantic Appliance Services in Wilmington and has even started his own business on the side.

Get Ready to Work With VR!
Reaching Your Career Goals.

You may have a disability.

It could be physical or mental. It could be a hearing, speech, visual or learning limitation. It could also be drug or alcohol-related.

But you want to get on with your life.

You have abilities and you want to work, or you may simply be trying to stay on the job.

A disability can make getting ready to work difficult, with lots of decisions and lots of hurdles to get over.

We’re North Carolina Vocational Rehabilitation Services (“VR”) and we’d like to help.

If you qualify, services can include training, education, counseling, job placement, medical care, transportation, and others.

In many cases, the services don’t stop once you’re on the job.

Last year in North Carolina, employers hired thousands of individuals who’d been served by VR.

Now in businesses across the state, these employees are bringing a wide range of skills, experience and abilities to their jobs.

If you have a disability and need help getting ready to work, we’re right here.

Let’s get started!

Despite having lost both arms, Julio Posada was determined to become a draftsman. VR provided computer software and equipment that he could operate with his feet. Julio passed the drafting exam, started his own business and has become the Edenton area’s only certified draftsman.
